Super story!Von 1D82 ManySuper idea for a lovely, light hearted read!I really enjoyed the Park Lane setting and knowing that particular area of London well was an added bonus for me. I could almost feel the vibe of the location. I knew exactly where each of the characters was going and the scenes set, even down to the bank and the chemist! I really felt at home and comfortable while reading the book! I really liked the little quirks that make this book so London. Michael, the bank guard especially was just so true to life... The whole story seemed very down to earth and lifelike with friends of wildly differing characters. From the barking mad to the almost nauseating normal the Ladies of the divorcees dating agency didn't let us down. As they attempted to match up their clients they were making new lives for themselves too. Their own previous relationship experiences wove neatly through the whole book and while it was predictable (who cares, I like that on occasions, it's still a great story) it was also really well written and a joy to read.

Kurzbeschreibung When Connie, Jenny, Lucy and Sadie meet up for drinks, all they can talk about is their failed love life. After more drinks than might be good for them, they come up with the brilliant idea of opening their own online dating agency. Despite the arguments and differences between the thirty-something, divorced women, Divorcees.biz soon launches at one of London's most prestigious hotels. But is this the answer to their problems, or the beginning of a whole lot more? And at the end of the day, will any one of the four ladies find the man of their dreams?

ber den Autor und weitere Mitwirkende Since beginning a comprehensive writing course with The Writers Bureau in 2001, my articles and short stories have been published in a variety of magazines in the UK. In 2005 two of my short stories were included in quite different anthologies. The first story was in an International Anthology, published in June, while the second appeared in Caf Ole - Too Hot To Handle, which was launched in Glasgow. My first novel, The Trojan Project, a thriller, was published at the end of May 2008. Divorcees.Biz came next, followed by Only Twelve Days. Both of these novels are romances. I also review books for newbooks a bi-monthly magazine informing the public of new books on the shelves. I am a member of the Society of Authors, the Society of Women Writer's and Journalists and The Edinburgh Writer's Club, as well as being an Associate Member of NAWG (National Association of Writers Groups).
