nur so kurz herein gelesen. Doch es hat mich voll gepackt. Ein sehr ernstes Thema wurde mit viel britischem Humor und interessanten Charakteren verarbeitet. Tolle Lektre zum schmunzeln und etwas Nachdenken.0 von 0 Kunden started off with three short stories. I hate short stories! Then it changed and it was so interesting to read how all the diffrents plots and affairs in a fascinating way, that one never thought of would work out the way it did. All the same alls well that ends Well as they say. A good holiday book.

Kurzbeschreibung Doesn't Everyone Have a Secret? is a romantic comedy about three very different people, each with a secret, whose lives collide in unexpected ways. Steph is a harassed mum who's considering an affair with her children's sexy headmaster. Penny is trying to deal with a crush on her boss, OCD and a sad secret from her childhood. And Mike is a vicar who is being blackmailed for his secret, although it's not all that it seems! Meanwhile, all three are being watched over by their own guardian angels, who try to push them in the right direction and help move their lives along - but not always successfully ... Doesn't Everyone Have a Secret? is genuinely laugh out loud funny, but also deals in a sensitive way with serious problems that any of us could face in life. Sue Shepherd's debut novel is bold, it doesn't pull any punches, and it has bucket loads of heart. From Doesn't Everyone Have a Secret?: How many times have you begun watching a film and, to your immense irritation, spent the first fifteen minutes or so wondering what TV programme you've seen the handsome extra in? What a relief when the information you were groping for pops into your head and allows you to concentrate and enjoy the rest of the film in peace. Have you ever wondered why you occasionally check twice when pulling out of a road, only to spot a previously unseen vehicle on that second viewing? Maybe you've settled down to an episode of Come Dine With Me accompanied by a lovely cup of tea and a cream slice. But, as you take that first delicious bite you propel yourself from the sofa, shouting, Bugger it, because you've just remembered your precious first born son is waiting in the rain to be collected from football practice. It may be a voice gently whispering in your ear, an errand remembered in the nick of time or a subtle tap on the shoulder which alerts you to danger, these imperceptible events happen to each of us every day. We never query them or stop to speculate what's behind these small moments. But what if that tiny nagging voice in your head, the voice that's almost inaudible but can change everything what if that voice is not your voice at all? She now resides on the picturesque Isle of Wight with her husband, two sons and a standard poodle. Her passions in life are: her family, writing, the sea-side and all the beautiful purple things her sons have bought her over the years. Happiest when hunched over her laptop with a cup of tea on the go, Sue loves to create stories with plenty of heart and laughs, but, she makes sure to include a bit of grit and sex too. Ask Sue to plan too far in advance and you'll give her the heebie-jeebies and she'd prefer you not to mention Christmas until at least November! Describing herself as having Champagne tastes and a Cava bank account, Sue hopes you enjoy her debut novel. Website: www.sueshepherdwrites.co.uk
