A so-so story about ghosts, a psychic and a paranormal scepticVon Helen HancoxWhen Trent Sanders said on television that Selina James was delusional as she believes she speaks to ghosts he found himself in hot water. Selina's mother challenged him to spend two weeks in a haunted hotel (that had been closed down for years) with Selina to prove that ghosts really exist. He, of course, agreed to the challenge as part of his crusade against fraudsters after a fake psychic almost ruined his family after the death of his father.Trent and Selina initially find themselves cleaning some of the rooms to make them habitable, then have to fend off visits from various family members and eventually settle down to getting to know each other. Trent decided to use the time to write an exposé of frauds like Selina, she spent the first few days getting to know the two resident ghosts, Wesley the cowboy and his girlfriend Dixie.Most of the book is taken up with the ghosts doing various things like dropping bags of sugar and pinching Trent's backside and Trent thinking Selina's doing it. Their conversation seems to revolve around Selina being a fraud and Trent not being open to supernatural things with significant doses of sexual flirting as well. The ghosts give them disturbed sleep with fantasies about each other but there's not actually all that much plot to carry the book. Another newspaper woman, Barbara, makes a brief appearance but doesn't really add much to the story. The basic premise of the story is a giving-into-lust tale with the ghost element helping to fill in the rest of the events. Characterisation isn't very strong and the relationship between the two main characters seems far more lust-based than anything else. It's a reasonable enough book as a light read but ultimately unsatisfying.Originally published for Curled Up With A Good Book, curledup.com. Helen Hancox 2007

KurzbeschreibungSkeptic and author Trent Sanders will make so-called psychic Selena James pay for challenging him to stay two weeks in the supposedly haunted hotel of Garvey County. By the end of their two weeks hell expose her for the fraud she is. But when he sees her in person, it might just be possible she can raise the dead.Selena James is really pissed at Trent Sanders for publicly proclaiming her delusional. She doesnt care how hot the guy is, hell be eating his words before the two weeks are up! Shell prove ghosts exist. At least, she hopes she can. Ghosts can be very stubborn, obstinate, manipulative. This may be a very long two weeks. First, famously skeptical (and sinfully sexy) writer, Trent Sanders, called her delusional on TV. Next, her outraged mother publicly challenged him to spend two weeks with Selena at the haunted Garvey Hotel. Now, if Selena can't prove ghosts exist, she'll answer to Trent's private wager: one night in his bed. It doesn't take any psychic abilities to know Trent could satisfy a woman's every fantasy. And she may find out very soon, if the two sex-starved ghosts in residence have their way...Trent Sanders doesn't believe in anything he can't see, taste, or touch, and what he sees right now he would definitely enjoy tasting and touching. Selena James might be a bit kooky, but she's also blessed with a body that could certainly raise the dead, if not talk to them. She's even got a wicked sense of humour, like when she pinched his butt and insisted it wasn't her, but one of the "ghosts." Right. But as things move from "haunted" to extremely hot, Trent's starting to believe the paranormal is a one-way - make that four-way - ticket to paradise...
