This made me feel so good...Von Sophie CayeuxMADE ME FEEL SO GOOD.Fear of Flying, that was when I was young. How much did I like her book and Erica! When I saw Fear of Dying, it was a must read for me. Erica hasnt failed me. She is still witty and entertaining, cheeky and so likeable as a person. This book has really cheered me up. Why?

Because Erica, despite having it all, is just in the same spot as I am. We both deal with the same issues: getting old and seeing that the future ahead of us is not so attractive. Erica chats about all the contemporary issues women of her age face: deal with very old, frail and sick parents who are a constant reminder of what lays ahead of us, death of beloved ones, substance abuse, depression, family. But what Erica tells us is not only grim. She remains humorous, looks for sex to entertain herself (and the reader), meets all these weird men on the Internet (from Zipless.com!). As one can expect from her, she is amusing and reminds us constantly about the value of friendship and girlfriends. This book is an easy read. Even if Fear of Dying isn't as wildly exciting as Fear of Flying, this book made me feel good. It's about reaching 60. Erica looks back with wit at her life and reflects on her colorful past. But she lives now and retains an appetite for fun. She looks towards the future and shares her thoughts and fears. She is so honest and endearing. Let's have a laugh.
